Excellent point.

The intellectual culture in the entire western world is deeply, deeply anti-capitalist. It's hard for people to get their heads out of that milieu, even among dissidents.

As always – if any of you have substantive counterarguments, you are welcome on the show any time. I'm happy to learn how I'm wrong.

I understand that people are having a hard time focusing on the point of this video. They seem to be over eager lately to focus on the conspiracy theories involving medicine in pharma. Which is understandable given what we've just been through. But the point of the video had nothing to do with any of that. It was showing that one specific argument for these conspiracies regarding natural ...

The goal is not to make a profit from curing cancer.

The goal is permanent patients.

I dunno, most doctors I dealt with over the years simply follow the protocol, what they learned from authorized books in med school. And if the information there is wrong on some issues, well they are non the wiser. I suppose the Covid situation is a good example of many doctors just doing what they are told, and its not like all of them are liars. You can't say they were perfectly well informed or did their own research.

True. And the greatest medical censorship only managed to exist for a couple years... And even then during that time people were exposing them.

And even with all that going for them, they barely made it 2 years with false claims. The system is not as dysfunctional as people describe it to be. This is not an endorsement of it's current state. Just pushing back on some of the extreme positions people in our circles are taking without proper justification.

I think you're forgetting 2 things Patrick, 1. Most pharmaceutical companies are not in the business to cure you, they're in the business to treat your symtoms, help make you feel better and live a little longer but only so long as you take their medicine, because of this some natural cures that might exist will be suppressed, and 2. If you're a small start up company looking to make a new drug that's better than old ones you still have to jump through the hoops of the FDA to get it approved, and from my understanding that's been purposely made into such an expensive process that no one but the larger pharmaceutical companies can afford it, it's also quite possible the FDA may pay favorites and reject drugs made from other companies because they're secretly working with the older bigger ...

Again – think like a capitalist please. The same argument that defeats monopolies defeats yours. I could swoop in as a competitor and make a TON of EASY near INSTANT money curing everyone instead of treating people. If there were such secret silver bullet cures all it would take is one competitor and the whole charade falls instantly. And the competitor could be under any jurisdiction on the planet.

Reply

Radical_Neon 5 days ago
@Disenthrall you're correct about it being able to happen anywhere and if it did the charade would be up, however, of the places that have very little regulation or over oversight bureacracy making things expensive or putting up hurdles how many actually have the resources and technical expertise to come up with new drugs?

The best chemists in world happen to be mostly in the US and Europe, and maybe a little in Japan, all places that have alot of bureacracy.

The people attempting this argument as a conspiracy aren't using it for complex pharmaceuticals. They're using it for home remedies , simple and cheap stuff specifically.

Radical_Neon 5 days ago
@Disenthrall ah ok, yea that's probably not accurate.

I thought I remembered you saying in the video taking vitamin c and tweaking it to make something more effective, which would require chemistry.

Reply

Radical_Neon 4 days ago (edited)
@Disenthrall I mean you do agree in order to boost a natural compounds effectiveness you'd have to re-engineer that substance right?

And that was the second part of your example, taking one of these natural things and making something new based on it.

As for the first part purely pertaining to natural things I mostly agree with you, the only exception I might possibly see is maybe some traditional herbal healer that's in some far off place in the world that isn't looking to make money but knows of cures.

I think a lot of people are conflating the two examples. Big pharma could today capture vit c and charge a lot for it. They could tweak it in some trivial or non-trivial way to do anything from nothing extra to making it actually better. They could patent it. They could afford to easily get it approved. They could profit off of it. Hell they could not even tweak it. They could just make if branded and 'medical grade'. Think how many brands of WATER there is. This 'cant profit off of it' argument is just bad. That is all. People dont know how to think like businessmen is all.

I'll add my thoughts! :)
I think with another example besides cancer, it would be true... Where they would use vitamin c for example to actually develop something worthwhile but under their legal control....
But thinking about your example: the debate gets deeper because who's to say how exactly cancer can be cured, what causes it specifically... I believe it's related to psychology... But in other words, it's very abstract and carries unknown mysteries... Therefore the cure to it will also be 'abstract in theory, speculative & mysterious'... Right? I think this is done on purpose of course... And that's a whole ...

If they intend to imply that oral doses of vitamin C stops or kills cancer, there are many studies that show it doesn't. However, there are also studies that reflect taking high dose Intravenous Vitamin ...
