Harrison Tinsley and his son.

Eyyy, a happy story.

We love to report happy stories for you folks.

He saved the boy.

New York Post:

A California father said he's been granted full custody of his 4-year-old son following a protracted legal battle with the boy's mother — who allegedly forced the child to wear dresses and glitter because she wanted to raise him as non-binary.

Harrison Tinsley told "The Daily Signal Podcast" that he prevailed in the years-long court battle to win full physical custody of Sawyer, which the dad likened to "watching a miracle."

"I know he's a boy. He wants to be a boy. He adamantly expresses that," Tinsley told host Virginia Allen. "If you say anything to the contrary he gets very upset."

Tinsley alleged that Sawyer's mother — who he said identifies as a lesbian and non-binary herself — tried to push her gender ideology onto the child from the time he was a baby.

This included a cruel campaign of gaslighting like referring to Sawyer with they/them pronouns over his protestations, and forcing him to wear girls' diapers, dresses and makeup, the dad claimed.

After learning Sawyer's mother had been arrested for felony child endangerment, Tinsley filed for full custody in San Francisco Superior Court last year, claiming that she had "slandered and defamed" him for years. The details of that arrest and incident are unclear.

The dad said he presented the court with mountains of evidence — including eight hours of police bodycam footage and over 800 pages of supporting documents — but the court sided with Sawyer's mother, he said.

Tinsley appealed the decision last December, and claims that Child Protective Services in San Francisco became involved following an alleged "incident," about which he declined to further elaborate.

CPS investigated and then recommended Tinsley be granted full custody of the boy, and that the mother be subject to regular drug and alcohol testing, he claimed.

If you have money, and you can prove the mother is on drugs, you can get custody of your kids.

It is possible.

Don't give up until it's too late.

When it's too late though, you do have to give up.
