Why Democrats Should Be Losing Sleep Over Generation Z

Jeff Fecke
Contributor

Democrats have a problem with Millennials, but Generation Z could be an even bigger one. Gen Z is more diverse, more liberal, and more progressive than Millennials, and they're coming of age in a world that's more dangerous than ever.

Think Millennials will remain socially liberal and fiscally conservative? Gen Z is more socially liberal and more fiscally liberal. They're more likely to support a wealth tax, and they're more likely to support a universal basic income.

The party is also failing to connect with Gen Z on issues. Democrats believe that the climate crisis is the most important issue facing the country, but Gen Z doesn't. Gen Z is more likely to say that gun violence is the most important issue facing the country, and they're more likely to say that racism is the most important issue facing the country.

Democrats still pursue the Clintonite strategy of appealing to moderate Republicans, but Gen Z doesn't care about moderate Republicans. They're more likely to support a progressive candidate who will fight for their values, even if that candidate is unlikely to win.

Democrats also have a messaging problem. Gen Z is more likely to get their news from social media, and they're more likely to be influenced by memes and viral videos. Democrats are still trying to reach Gen Z through traditional media, and they're failing.

Democrats also have a voter suppression problem. Gen Z is more likely to be people of color, and they're more likely to be affected by voter suppression tactics like gerrymandering and voter ID laws.

Democrats are losing Gen Z, and they're losing them fast. If they don't change their strategy, they're going to lose the next generation of voters.

Democrats need to start appealing to Gen Z's values. They need to start talking about the issues that Gen Z cares about, like the climate crisis, gun violence, and racism. They need to start using social media to reach Gen Z, and they need to start fighting voter suppression tactics.

Democrats also need to start appealing to Gen Z's pocketbook. They need to start talking about a wealth tax and a universal basic income. They need to start talking about how they're going to help Gen Z pay off their student loan debt.

Democrats need to start appealing to Gen Z's sense of idealism. They need to start talking about how they're going to change the world for the better.

If they don't start doing these things, they're going to lose Gen Z. And if they lose Gen Z, they're going to lose the next generation of voters.

But there's hope. Democrats can still win Gen Z's support. They just need to start listening to Gen Z and start appealing to their values.

If they do, they'll be rewarded with a loyal and engaged voting bloc that will help them win elections for years to come.

But if they don't, they're going to lose Gen Z. And if they lose Gen Z, they're going to lose the next generation of voters.

The choice is theirs.

Opinions expressed by Forbes Contributors are their own.

Jeff Fecke is a writer. Check out my website at ...
Follow

Reprints & Permissions
ADVERTISEMENT

The Inside Story Of Papa John's Toxic Culture

Jeff Schneider
Contributor

Group Created with Sketch.
Forbes Business Council is the premier community for executives in business. Qualified members may be invited to contribute.

Jeff Schneider is a Forbes Business Council member and the CEO of Lead Change Group.

Opinions expressed by Forbes Contributors are their own.

Follow

Reprints & Permissions