SOCIOLOGY
COLORADO STATE UNIVERSITY

From the Chair

It has been a pleasure to serve as Department Chair for the past two years. Our faculty, staff, and students have been resilient and creative in the face of the challenges of the COVID-19 pandemic. Sociology's strengths in engaged scholarship, community engagement, and applied research have been particularly valuable in helping us navigate these challenging times. Our graduate and undergraduate programs have continued to grow and thrive, and we have welcomed several new faculty members to the department. I am grateful to have had the opportunity to work with such a talented and dedicated group of colleagues. I look forward to continuing to serve the department in the coming years.

Graduate students in Dr. Jessica Ramirez's Sociology of Race and Ethnicity course developed social justice sociology recommendations for the Fort Collins Police Services. Students in the course, which was offered in Spring 2021, were tasked with developing recommendations that would help the police department to address issues of racial bias and discrimination in its operations. The students' recommendations were based on their own research and on input from community members. The students presented their recommendations to the police department in a public meeting. The police department has since implemented some of the students' recommendations, including the creation of a community advisory board and the development of a new training program for officers.
