The ballot measure seeks to add language to the state constitution that would establish parents as the primary decision-makers for their children.

Voters in Texas are considering Proposition 15, known as the Parental Rights Amendment, on Tuesday.

If approved by voters, the measure would affirm that parents have the right “to exercise care, custody, and control of the parent’s child, including the right to make decisions concerning the child’s upbringing” and the responsibility “to nurture and protect the parent’s child.”

The measure would enshrine parental rights, an animating issue for conservatives, into the state’s constitution.
