How the Marxists have used female sports to undermine our societies.

Women's and girl's sports are a key part of the Marxist demolition of our civilization, our societies, and our families. Their implicit intent is to make women less feminine and more masculine while trivialising and demeaning masculine activities through female participation and dramatically reducing the number of activities available only to men, and at the same time demeaning and even destroying women. On top of that at a competitive level they're lame as shit.

We have been conditioned for all of our lives to believe that girls participating in sports is an intrinsically good thing. Girls get to participate and take part, yey! How could you not like that? You must be a really bad and mean person not to love girls participating in sports. And if you don't like women in sports then you must be an awful bigoted misogynist who is the modern equivalent to a caveman, and we bet that you have a really small dick, right ladies? Eww, look at that small dick man.

So let's get all of that out of the way, okay sweethearts? I hereby declare that I am a really bad and mean person, an awful awful bigoted misogynist, and that my dick is so small, ants point me out and mock me when I go on nude nature walks.

All that notwithstanding, girls and women in sports is entirely a perverted symptom of the age of modernism, and it is not because we are so much more enlightened than our forefathers, but rather because we have been subjected to endless propaganda on this topic for the very specific purposes that I stated above. So why is sport bad for girls?

The first reason is that it is physically bad for them. Young girls and teenage girl bodies were not made for competitive sports. And these days the sports are very, very competitive indeed, as parents of both sexes use the excuse of sport to make up for imaginary defects which the same propaganda has told them that they are BAD PARENTS if all of their free time is not spent as a shuttle service for their children, and all of their spare money is drained away in the cult of children's sports.

Young teenage girls who actively participate in sports display a marked slowdown and even suspension in physical maturity. They barely develop breasts or curves of their body, instead looking like teenage boys with very undeveloped breasts and hips. I have no official studies by official experts to throw at you to prove this, and I don't care to anyway. What I do possess are two eyes that can see, and two ears that can process words when people speak. And in the course of my life and the women and girls that I have known who have played a lot of sports, and some at a very high level, this observation is across the board, 100% accurate, all of the time.

I very much doubt that this is good for developing female bodies. But hey, most of the women in our so very high functioning societies are on some form of anti-depressants, so from that I am sure that we will hear that if it wasn't for women's sports then they would be on even more anti-depressants, snark snark.

Then there is the physical damage. Boxing and MMA combat sports now have professional female competitions. Women are physically assaulted, maimed, and at the extreme side even killed. (I did the Google search for you). So on the one hand we have a society that leaps to prosecute a husband for raising his voice to his wife in his own home, let alone giving her a good old fashioned slap around, while on the other hand it encourages women and girls to climb into fighting rings to have the shit beaten out of them. The former is the worst thing ever, while the latter is classed as "empowering".

Then there are the recent pushes for women's team sports such as rugby and AFL in Australia. These are physically demanding full contact sports. At present there is huge debate in Australia over the rising cases of head injuries for men playing these sports at a professional level which result in brain injuries such as dementia. Yet at the same time women are being championed into playing the very same sports with nary a murmur as to putting two and two together. I suppose an aspect of equality that we must accept is eventual brain damage from full contact team sports.

I know that rank hypocrisy is a feature of our Marxist societies, not a bug, but I feel compelled to point it out regardless.

Women's sports are also bad for women because they are overwhelmingly immodest. So all of my critics can now add the adjective prude to the others that I listed above. But immodesty in women is very bad for societies, as all societies including our own have known until the blight of modernity was foisted upon us. Here is an excellent article from Chris Jackson on the death of Catholic modesty; the article itself being inspired by the event of a church service being held for a bunch of marathon runners, aka girls in sport. Jackson writes with conviction on the importance of modesty for women and girls while attending Holy mass, but his arguments are also pertinent for society as a whole. Whether it be in airports or on airplanes, on the streets or on the beaches, in shopping centres or baseball games, our societies are overwhelmingly immodest to our great detriment.

But it is on the sports grounds themselves where immodesty is the norm and modesty is non existent. Gymnastics, swimming, track meets and athletic events of any type, volleyball; look, there is little point in listing all of them. Perhaps a single photographic example will help make the point.

If you can't understand or accept that this is immodest and unacceptable then you are either evil or you are so conditioned by modernist propaganda that you are almost beyond help.

Another feature of team sports in particular is the art of verbal warfare, known as trash talking or sledging. This is an entirely masculine activity and an important aspect of male bonding. But the more women play team sports then the more that they too think that this masculine activity is now open to them. So they strut, and they leer, and they display forlorn acts of false bravado in a futile and pitiful attempt at play-acting at being a man. It is nothing short of demeaning for our women. I am dismayed that I even have to write about it.

Finally, women's sports, and women's team sports in particular, promote and encourage lesbianism. It is a running joke at how many players on the US women's soccer team are rug munchers, but a joke it is not. This aspect of women's sports degrades and humiliates women, while encouraging the to fall into sin. New entrants are bullied into participating, and ferociously vilified if they somehow manage to resist.

In short, there is not a single positive aspect to girl's or women's sports. The only sports that I think are acceptable to women on a professional level are horse riding, (but not sprint races), and formal dancing that is not lewd. On a social level then tennis and golf I suppose are acceptable as long as the women are dressed appropriately.

Nothing that I have written here would have been even thought for a moment to be anything but completely obvious to everyone concerned around 80 years ago. But the Marxist and Communist dirtbags have had their hands on the tiller for several decades now, such that we no longer know right from wrong on so many topics. Women's sports is but one example.

Also, watching women chase a football around a field is like watching women chase a football around a field.

When I have suggested this to the men in my life, they look at me like I have six heads. I think the impulse is to assume that I feel this way because I was not sportsy and I am sour grapes. However, I cannot reconcile it with traditional Catholicism and I feel that competitive sports in particular fosters something in women that later manifests in destructive behaviors in their behaviors with men. Additionally, I have noticed a trend in local school sports where the female teams get praised and extolled and when the boy's teams play its crickets.

Sports make women hot. Look at female track and field athletes and skaters.

Even the women who don't do sports benefit from positive examples. Which woman sees Yuliya Levchenko and Alica Schmidt and Isabeau Levito and doesn't want to look like them?

The female body sculpted by running and dancing for years on end is the most beautiful thing on God's green earth, and a Christian society has an absolute moral duty to encourage it to the maximum.
